

NYPD stop-and-frisk: Racial bias remains unchanged

Although the absolute number of stops by the NYPD has decreased, the breakdown by race as share of total people stopped each year shows that one of the main points of criticism remains completely unchanged: Black and hispanic people get searched disproportionately more often than white people.

